Knowledge Mosaic Takes on Risk

Securities Mosaic research platform now boasts massive Risk Factors database

SEATTLE — July 2, 2008 — Knowledge Mosaic LLC, a leading provider of news and online research platforms for the corporate and securities industries, today announced the incorporation of its vast, classified repository of Risk Factors statements into its flagship website, Securities Mosaic. The major enhancement was launched yesterday.

The Risk Factors database features more than one million risk factor statements parsed from the SEC filings, categorized into more than 30 major categories and nearly 1,000 minor categories. Users can instantly locate risk disclosure data through a powerful combination of search fields, bypassing the unwieldy SEC filings in which that data is buried. The tool allows users to analyze and map risk, locate model disclosure language, profile industry and business segment risk, analyze deficiencies, and identify potential liability.

As Knowledge Mosaic President and Founder Peter Schwartz explains, yesterday's launch is just one step toward a longer-term goal. "We are committed to the idea that in the future, research will be organized not around documents, but around the data extracted from those documents. In many legal research and legal practice contexts, the information in documents is best delivered to the practitioner via a data-rich search environment in which the document itself is irrelevant. Expect this trend to continue and, indeed, to accelerate."

Since early in 2006, larger public companies have been required to include a Risk Factors section in their 10-K Business Description item. These annual report risk disclosure statements provide a more comprehensive survey of company risk than the disclosure statements associated with new offerings. Knowledge Mosaic has extracted more than 160,000 risk factor statements from annual reports, and now cover more than 90 percent of the public companies listed on major US exchanges.
